The Book of the Dead

To the ancient Egyptians death _____(to mark) the end of one journey and the beginning of another.

After death all ancient Egyptians _____(to believe) that they must leave behind the green fertile farmlands of Egypt and the waters of the river Nile to travel to the after life. They _____(to hope) the afterlife would resemble the Egypt they had left behind.

It was called “The field of Reeds”. But to reach the afterlife they _____(to have) to make a dangerous and frightening journey.

Their spirit _____(to have) to cross the Netherworld ruled by god Osiris.

The ancient Egyptians _____(to believe) it was important to prepare for this journey.

When wealthy ancient Egyptians _____(to die) their bodies were mummified. The mummies always were placed in a tomb with special objects to protect it. One of the objects _____(to be) a roll of magic spells. This is known as the Book of the Dead.

The mummy _____(to stay) in the tomb, but its Ba spirit, which _____(to look) like a human faced bird _____(to can) fly away and explore the Netherworld. The spirit of the dead person _____(to pass) through gates guarded by the gods and _____(to have) to battle with snakes, crocodiles and blood-thirsty monsters. The dead person _____(to use) magic and spells to help them overcome these obstacles. At the end of each day the Ba spirit _____(to return) to the mummy in the tomb.

The most important stage in the journey of the dead _____(to be) in the Hall of Judgement. The dead person’s heart was weighed against the feather of truth.

If their heart _____(to prove) too heavy, it would be eaten by the monstrous Devourer. If the heart _____(to balance) on the scales, the dead person would be allowed to remain forever in a perfect world travelling across the skies with the sun god Ra or tending their crops in a perfect landscape that resembled the banks of the river Nile.
